Effects of ovarian steroids on spontaneous in vivo fetal movements in the rat. The effects of ovarian steroids on the spontaneous fetal movements of the rat were studied in pregnant rats from day 17.5 to day 19.5 of gestation. Control rats (n = 38) showed an average number of 98.2 fetal movements per day per rat on day 18.5. Exogenous progesterone (1 mg/rat) or oestradiol (2 micrograms/rat) given to prooestrus females on the day before mating had no effect on the number of movements. When progesterone (1 mg/rat) or oestradiol (2 micrograms/rat) was given to ovariectomized pregnant rats (n = 15) or hypophysectomized pregnant rats (n = 25), the number of movements was significantly decreased as compared to controls, with no significant differences between the two treatments. These results indicate that ovariectomy and hypophysectomy influence the number of fetal movements on day 18.5 of gestation in the rat. Furthermore, in ovariectomized pregnant rats (n = 6), we determined the effects of progesterone (1 mg/rat) or oestradiol (2 micrograms/rat) on fetal movements and plasma levels of prolactin (PRL) and luteinizing hormone (LH). Administration of progesterone (1 mg/rat) on day 18.5 resulted in decreased fetal movements on day 19.5, while administration of oestradiol (2 micrograms/rat) induced a dramatic increase in fetal movements on day 19.5 compared to control values, with no changes in plasma levels of PRL or LH. The present results together with those reported previously on the neonatal reflex ba244e880a
