Store different passwords and user names in one place, so you wouldn't forget them. Create a new database or add the existing ones with or without changing the password. Group your entries and name them to easily identify which one is for which website. Add a title, pick a group, add an URL or path and some notes so you would know what it stands for. Sorting options by group, title, username, password, URL or notes. Automatically clear the clipboard after a number of seconds and lock the database after a few minutes of inactivity. What is Passport? As I said before, Passport is a very nice application that you could use in order to create databases with your passwords and lock them with a key. You can download it for free, without any limitations. The application is officially discontinued, but you could still use it for 30 days, in which case you would get a free license key to be used as many times as you want. The first thing you need to do after launching the application is to create a new database with your passwords and then pick a master password. You have the option to create a new database, copy the one that is opened or use the one that you created before. You can add your usernames and passwords one by one or just leave them blank for creating the database. You have the option to create multiple databases with various passwords and group them together. Simply add your usernames and passwords one by one in order to create a database. You can add a title, pick a group, add an URL or path and some notes so you would know what it stands for. Passwords can also be generated inside the application. There's the option to sort items by group, title, username, password, URL or notes. You have the option to automatically clear the clipboard after a number of seconds and lock the database after a few minutes of inactivity. All in all, Passport is a very nice application that you could use in order to create databases with your passwords and lock them with a key. The first standard I have is to be confident in myself, my work, and my ability. By realizing that I can do just about anything I set out to do, I'm able to let go of my inhibitions and stay true to myself. The second standard I have is to release my ego from my work. Because my ego is what pushes me to be something that I'm not, I find my ego may inhibit my work. I'm not saying that you all have to be like me, but if you find yourself using the same strategies of not taking any chances or pushing yourself past your limits when you create, chances are that you are in your ego. Letting go of your ego and believing in yourself is a challenge but one that I find rewarding. The last standard I have is to balance my work. Because some of my works tend to be very intense, I need to make sure I give myself enough time to recharge. If I don't recharge, I risk burning myself out, which will result in inferior work or none at all. In the creation community, many people struggle with self doubt, not feeling confident in themselves or their abilities. I find that I tend to set a very high standard for myself. So I've found that the more I feel like I need to prove myself to my audience, or to hold myself back because I am afraid to disappoint them, the less I want to create. How do you balance your Ego? Leave me a comment below and let me know what you feel is important in balancing your ego. I believe it is very easy to get in your own way if you're not careful. Like all artists, I push myself to the limits every time I create because there is something in my 09e8f5149f
